Medical expert, by the use of the Microscope, have recently discovered and classified specific living germs in the blood of all persons suffering from, and say that to cure the patient these germs must be killed. Thirty years ago Dr. Shallenberger advanced this theory as the correct one, and prepared his "Antidote for Malaria" to destroy these poisonous germs. If you have Malaria in your system, a few doses of this medicine will destroy the poison immediately, and not injure an infant. Sold by Druggists, avt.

RAY'S OF MIRTH.

(Phila. Herald.)
The man that's rich should happy be,
He need not put on airs,
Nor care a single cent, not he,
What kind of clothes he wears.
The man by poverty oppressed,
Must in his garb take pride;
Wear clothing of the very best
His poverty to hide.

EDUCATION.

PROF. STORUM IN THE A. M. E. CHURCH REVIEW.

The A. M. E. Church Review of July contains an excellent article on Education and Labor from the pen of Prof. J. M. Storum, of this city. In speaking of the schools the professor says: "Those who are to educate and prepare for national use this vast body of illiteracy; those who are to crystallize into intelligent sovereigns this element, that to-day stands as a potent menace to this Republic, must be prepared intellectually and morally to successfully meet and overcome the evil. The fact is that too little attention is given to the moral fitness of teachers; in fact, in too many cases it is entirely ignored. I do not hesitate to assert, and I have and always shall maintain, that no one ought to be permitted to train children, that no one ought to be allowed to teach, who is morally deficient. There is no qualification more essential in a teacher than that of an irreproachable character and fixed principle of duty and obligation. "As the teacher so the pupil," is a familiar adage, and, to a very great extent, a truism. The teacher must, from the very relation he or she sustains to his or her pupils, leave his or her impress and lead them in the path he or she treads. Unless, then, the teacher has well-defined principles of right and wrong, such instructor will lead the little ones, too, astray, and the result will be that, instead of our schools being a home to the future rulers and citizens void of truth, virtue and morality. Be it far from me to argue or claim that in our schools should be taught the tenets of religious denominations. But I do not hesitate to assert that these grand and noble principles of virtue, truth, honesty and temperance, without which no community is safe and government is impossible, should be and must be infused—implanted deep down in the life and character of every child, and form a part of its very being. This is within the province of our schools and must not be disregarded. Dr. Mayo says: "The common school is the place of all others to inculcate the great industrial, social and civic virtues of honesty, charity, truthfulness, justice, responsibility for social order, all the moral safeguards of national life." The teacher whose life and character are averse to these high and lofty principles can not impress them upon others, and has no right to instruct the future men and women of this or any other country. Such a teacher robs the children of what properly belongs to them, and is guilty of a crime that will surely be punished. "He that causes one of these little ones to offend, it were better that a millstone were banged about his neck and he be drowned in the depths of the sea."

If the pupils of our schools are to be taught, by precept or example, intrigue, deception, fraud, misrepresentation, extravagance in thought, expression and appearance, then indeed will we infuse into the veins and arteries of our social and national life the elements that will insure death. The aim and purpose of education is to make man a complete creature of his kind, having a well-developed body, a finely cultured and well-trained intellect, and a refined moral nature. To grow such men and women is the grand ultimatum of education, to nurture, to direct and to shape these is the noble prerogative of the teacher. Such constituent elements contributing to our nation's growth will produce fruit both nutritious, beautiful, delicious and perennial. There is scarcely a person who will not concede that the teacher's scholastic preparations ought to be definite, broad and liberal, yet in too many instances it is practically ignored. In October last a young man who had graduated from one of our New England colleges returned to his native state, Mississippi, and made application to teach. He was very positively and, according to their idea, very courteously requested to leave the State within twenty four hours, or receive from the hands of his sympathizing citizens the very suggestive present of hemp. Not having been accustomed to so warm a climate for several years, and not being able to appreciate the kind reception tendered him, and not wishing to appear so conspicuous, he accepted the first proposition and returned to New England, where the climate and social surroundings are more congenial. To secure national greatness the means must be properly employed, and untrained hands can not accomplish it. So teachers must be thoroughly and well prepared. The idea has obtained, and it is not yet entirely obliterated, that a teacher need only to know how to "read and write and cipher" a little to teach school. We are more particular with our blooded stock than that. If one of our children is sick we send for the best physician within our reach, a man who has had large experience and is skilled in his profession. Why, if our horses or cows are sick we seek for, a man whose reputation of, and skill in, the treatment of the particular malady are wide-spread. But when we desire some one to instruct our children, to develop the immortal soul, we take one who has had no preparation for the work and is devoid of both talent and skill. All educators are rejoiced to see this idea slowly fading away and the demand being made for trained teachers. But the demand must be general, and in those parts where ignorance most predominates there must be the most skillful teachers, if there is to be any distinction at all. And for this reason I am in favor of, and believe it is the duty of the government to contribute largely for the education of the people and control it, so that all people shall share alike in its benefits. The government must conserve the forces that party, by whatever name known, that desires to educate the people, that demands that the incubus of ignorance be lifted from the body politic, is the friend of the government and seeks its good and desires to provide for its continuance. The party which will not educate the people is an enemy to the government and will seek its overthrow. I have already said that education has for its object the development of the entire being, to make man the best of his kind. It is to tell man how to live in this life and to prepare him for the life to come. Then to prepare one for this life, the hand must be educated as well as the heart and head. The idea that labor is honorable and essential to our existence must be implanted in the very being of our citizenship and stamped upon the character of our national life. We must join in holy wedlock the brain and hand, and with such a union our success is assured.

From the Herald of Faith St. Louis, Missouri, August 10, 1887.
Referring to Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria, the business manager of the Herald of Faith would say, that he gave this medicine a personal trial, and was speedily cured of an unpleasant intermittent fever. He then recommended it to F. J. Tiefenbraun, 1915 Papin street, and to police officer Meidenger, at the Union Depot, both of whom were cured by it of chills and fever of several years' standing. Recently his wife, after a fever of several days duration, took a single dose and was perfectly cured. In view of these remarkable cures, and remembering how much money is spent for quinine, so little to be depended upon, and often so injurious, we can only wish that Shallenberger's Antidote would come into general use.
